Acces PDF Bruising Peg Most bruises form when small blood vessels (capillaries) near the skin's surface are broken by the impact of a blow or injury — often on the arms or legs. When this happens, blood leaks out of the vessels and initially appears as a black-and-blue mark. Eventually your body reabsorbs the blood, and the mark disappears.

Bruises look like tiny dots. These bruises are called petechiae and appear when tiny blood vessels called capillaries break. They're common on the neck and chest after prolonged straining from vomiting or childbirth. They also can appear on the lower legs and may be an early sign of problems with platelets, the blood cells involved in clotting. Bing: Bruising Peg if you begin to notice bruises on the legs when you do not recall injuring yourself, then it can be a bit alarming. Since bruises often take a few days to appear, it can be easy to forget a minor incident that might have caused it. However, if these unexplained bruises begin to appear on the legs quite frequently, then there may be an underlying ailment that could be disrupting your circulation.

Bruising or bleeding is one of the most common symptoms associated with a blood cancer diagnosis. According to our 2018 patient survey, " Living with Leukaemia ", frequent bruising and bleeding precedes a diagnosis of leukaemia in 24% of patients. Bruising is defined as bleeding that occurs underneath the skin, causing black, blue or purple marks to visibly appear on the skin's surface.
