You can start at 8am and stop at 4pm. Or you start at 2pm and stop at 10pm. Do whatever works for you. I tend to find that eating around 1pm and 8pm works well because those times allow me to eat lunch and dinner with friends and family. Breakfast is typically a meal that I eat on my own, so skipping it isn't a big deal.

Would You Prefer a Gradual Change to Whole-Food, Plant-Based Eating? We know that a sudden shift to plant-based eating isn't for everyone. We asked one of our expert contributors, Craig McDougall, MD, for his advice: " Add around 1,000 calories of legumes, whole grains, and starchy vegetables to your everyday routine. These starchy foods keep you full and satisfied, so you'll naturally eat less of the animal products and processed foods that are making you sick. "
